

The Latest Pictures of Brave Halifax's Great Disaster

Little Muriel Jackson, who jumped from a window as the roof of St. Joseph's School caved in, killing fifty children. As none of her family of six have called to claim her, it is supposed the family has been wiped out. International Film.

This Halifax cat, held by a Canadian soldier, has more than nine lives. Tabby was taken from the wreckage of its home after being there three days. Five bodies were also taken from the ruins of this house. Montreal Standard.

A rescue party searching for bodies of the dead among the great piles of debris from the razed homes. A terrific Canadian blizzard added to the difficulties and horrors of the relief work. The building in the background was the death chamber of scores of girls and men. Underwood.

This snow-covered, devastated residential section of wrecked homes has all the appearance and horrors of a war-stricken city overseas. Underwood.

Canadian troopers and relief workers bearing the body of one of the disaster's victims on an improvised stretcher through a blizzard. West-News Union.

What the concussion of the terrific blast did to a frame house over 2 1/2 miles away from the scene of the explosion. Montreal Standard.

The seriously wounded are being transferred from motor trucks to the Canadian Railway's military hospital train to be rushed to nearby cities for treatment. Underwood.

This group of little Halifax children are lined up before one of the relief stations to receive food for their stricken families. The little chap to the right with the big basket was badly wounded, but is pluckily doing his bit. Montreal Standard.

Here's what happened to hundreds of Halifax's finest homes. In the foreground a group of Canadian soldiers with shovels and picks to aid them in their rescue work among the wrecks. Underwood.

All that remains of the Halifax railway station, in which sixty were killed when the roof fell in. Workmen are busily engaged clearing the debris in an effort to get their trains running on schedule again. Underwood.
